Annual salary: From $52 264 to $74 389, according to FNEC salary scale

Work description

The FNEC is looking for a special education counsellor to support school teams in the organization and deployment of special education resources. The counsellor promotes the implementation of educational programs and strategies that foster the development and success of students with special needs. The special education counsellor keeps abreast of the latest developments in special education while keeping in mind the particular context of First Nations and the learning disabilities or special needs of students, and communicates this information to member communities.

Requirements

- Undergraduate degree in education (specialization in early childhood education, special education or psychoeducation) and at least five (5) years of teaching experience or in developing teaching methods.
- This position requires oral and written fluency in Canada's two official languages (French and English).
- Good understanding of First Nations education.

Working conditions

This position may require travelling twelve times a year at the most.

Conditions of employment

We offer competitive working conditions: group insurance, pension fund, Christmas holidays, flexible cultural holidays, three weeks of annual vacation time upon hiring, sick leave, possibility of regular or episodic telework, work schedule options available, summer schedule, etc.

Application deadline: 4:00 p.m. October 19, 2018

To ensure services meeting the needs of member communities are provided by qualified staff representative of the population it serves, the FNEC promotes staffing in the following order: 1) First Nations members from FNEC-member communities, 2) members of other First Nations, 3) Indigenous peoples, 4) other applicants.

Please send your application to the FNEC by mail, email or by fax:
